From the LONDON GAZETTE

(EXTRAORDINARY.)

WHITEHALL, August 24, 1778.

THE following letter from Lieutenant General Sir Henry Clinton, Knight of the Bath, to Lord Geo. Germain, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, was received on Saturday night by Col. Patterson, who arrived in the Grantham Packet from New-York.

MY LORD, New-York, July 5, 1778.

I Have the honour to inform your Lordship, that pursuant to his Majesty's instructions, I evacuated Philadelphia on the 18th of June, at three o'clock in the morning, and proceeded to Gloucester Point without being followed by the enemy. Every thing being from thence passed in safety across the Delaware, through the excellent disposition made by the Admiral to secure our passage, the army marched at ten o'clock, and reached Hadoonfield the same day. A strong corps of the enemy having, upon our approach abandoned the difficult pass of Mount Holly, the army proceeded without any interuption from them, excepting what was occasioned, by their having destroyed every bridge on our road. As the country is much intersected with marshy rivulets, the obstructions we met with were frequent, and the excessive heat of the season rendered the labour of repairing the Bridges severely felt.

The advanced parties of our light troops arriving unexpectedly at Croswicks on the 23d, after a trifling skirmish, prevented the enemy from destroying the bridge over a large creek at that village, and the army passed it the next morning. One column under the command of his Excellency Lieut. Gen. Knyphausen, halted near Amely's Town; the provision train and heavy artillery were stationed in that division, and the other column, and Lieut. General Earl Cornwallis, took a position at Allen's Town, which covered the other encampment.

Thus far, my Lord, my march pointed equally towards the Hudson's River and Staten Island by the Raritan. I was now at the juncture, when it was necessary to decide ultimately what course to pursue.

Encumbered as I was by an enormous provision train, &c. to which impediment the probability of obstructions, and length of my march, obliged me to submit, I was led to wish for a route less liable to obstacles than those above mentioned.

I had received intelligence that Generals Washington and Lee had crossed the Delaware with their army, had assembled a numerous militia from all the neighbouring provinces and that Gates, with an army from the northward, was advancing to join them on the Raritan. As I could not hope that, after having always hitherto so studiously avoided a general action, General Washington would now give into it against every dictate of policy; I could only suppose that his views were directed against my baggage, &c. in which part I was indeed vulnerable. This circumstance alone would have tempted me to avoid the difficult passage of the Raritan; but when I reflected that from Sandy-Hook I should be able, with more expedition, to carry his Majesty's further orders into execution, I did not hesitate to order the army into the road which leads through Freehold to the Navesink. The approach of the enemy's army, being indicated by the frequent appearance of their light troops on our rear, I requested his Excellency Lieutenant General Knyphausen to take the baggage of the whole army under the charge of his division consisting of the troops mentioned in the margin*. Under the head of baggage was comprised, not only all the wheel carriages of every department, but also the bat horses; a train which, as the country admitted but of one route for carriages, extended near 12 miles. The indispensible necessity I was under of securing them is obvious; and the difficulty of doing it, in a woody country, against an army far superior in numbers, will, I trust, be no less so.

I desired Lieutenant General Knyphausen to move at day-break on the 28th; and, that I might not press upon him in the first part of the march, in which we had but one road, I did not follow with the other division† till near eight o'clock. Soon after I had marched, reconnoitering parties appeared on our left flank. The Queen's rangers fell in with and dispersed some detachments among the woods in the same quarter. Our rear guard having descended from the heights above Freehold into a plain near three miles in length, and about one in breadth, several columns of the enemy appeared likewise descending into the plain, and about ten o'clock they began to cannonade our rear. Intelligence was this instant brought me, that the enemy were discovered marching in force on both our flanks. I was convinced that our baggage was their object; but it being at this juncture engaged in defiles, which continued for some miles, no means occurred of parrying the blow, but attacking the corps which harrassed our rear, and pressed it so hard, as to oblige the detachments to return from our flanks to its assistance.

I had good information, that General Washington was up with his whole army, estimated at about 20,000, but as I knew there were two defiles between him and the corps at which I meant to strike, I judged that he could not have passed them with a greater force than what Lord Cornwallis's division was well able to engage; and had I even met his whole army in the passage of those defiles, I had little to apprehend, but his situation might have been critical.

The enemy's cavalry, commanded, it is said, by M. la Fayette, having approached within our reach, they were charged with great spirit by the Queen's light dragoons. They did not wait the shock, but fell back in confusion upon their own infantry.

Thinking it possible that the event might draw to a general action; I sent for a Brigade of British, and the 17th light dragoons, from Lieutenant General Knyphausen's division; and having directed them on their arrival to take position effectually covering our right flank, of which I was most jealous, I made a disposition of attack in the plain; but before I could advance the enemy fell back, and took a strong position on the heights above Freehold Court-House. The heat of the weather was intense, and our men already suffered extremely from fatigue; but our circumstances obliged us to make a vigorous exertion. The British Grenadiers, with their left to the village of Freehold, and the guards on the right of the grenadiers, began the attack with such spirit, that the enemy gave way immediately. The second line of the enemy stood the attack with greater obstinacy, but were likewise completely routed. They then took a third position, with a marshy hollow in front, over which it would have been scarcely possible to have attacked them. However part of the second line made a movement to the front, occupied some ground on the enemy's left flank, and the light infantry and Queen's rangers turned their left.

By this time our men were so overpowered with fatigue, that I could press the affair no further, especially as I was confident the end was gained for which the attack had been made.

I ordered the light infantry to rejoin me; but a strong detachment of the enemy having possessed themselves of a post, which would have annoyed them in their retreat, the 33d regiment made a movement towards the enemy, which by a similar one made by the 1st grenadiers, immediately dispersed them.

I took the position from whence the enemy had first been driven, after they had quitted the plain, and having reposed the troops till ten at night, to avoid the excessive heat of the day, I took advantage of the moon-light to rejoin Lieutenant General Knyphausen, who had advanced to Nut Swamp, near Middletown.

Our baggage had been attempted by some of the enemy's light troops, who were repulsed by the good disposition made by Lieutenant-General Knyphausen and Major General Grant, and the good countenance of the 40th regiment, whose pickets alone were attacked, and one troop of the 17th light dragoons. The two corps which had marched against it (being, as I have since learned a brigade on each flank) were recalled, as I had suspected at the beginning of the action.

It would be sufficient honour to the troops barely to say, that they had forced a corps, as I am informed, of near 12,000 men, from two strong positions; but it will, I doubt not, be considered as doubly creditable, when I mention, that they did it under such disadvantages of heat and fatigue, that a great part of those we lost fell dead as they advanced, without a wound.

Fearing that my first order had miscarried, before I quitted this ground I sent a second, for a brigade of infantry,

* 28th light dragoons, 3d battalion of light infantry, Hessian Yagers, 1st and 3d brigades British, Stein's and Loos's brigades of Hessians, Pennsylvania loyalists, West-Jersey volonteers, Maryland loyalists.

† 16th light dragoons, 3 battalion of British grenadiers, 2d ditto. 1st battalion of light infantry. Hessian grenadiers. Guards. 3d, 4th, 5th brigades British.

infantry, the 17th light dragoons, and 2d battalion of light infantry, to meet me on the march, with which additional force, had General Washington shewn himself the next day, I was determined to attack him; but there not being the least appearance of an enemy, I suspected he might have pushed a considerable corps to a strong position near Middletown; I therefore left the rear guard on its march, and detached Major General Grant to take post there which was effected on the 29th. The whole army marched to this position next day, and then fell back to another near Navesink, where I waited two days, in hope that Mr. Washington might be tempted to advance to the position near Middletown, which we had quitted; in which case I might have attacked him to advantage.

During this time the sick and wounded were embarked, and preparations made for passing to Sandy-hook island by a bridge, which by the extraordinary efforts of the navy, was soon completed, and over which the whole army passed in about two hours time; the horses and cattle having been previously transported.

Your Lordship will receive herewith a return of the killed, wounded, missing, &c. of his Majesty's troops on the 28th of last month, that of the enemy is supposed to be more considerable, especially in killed. The loss of Lieutenant Col. Monckton, who commanded the 2d battalion of grenadiers, is much to be lamented.

I am much indebted to Lord Cornwallis for his zealous services on every occasion; and I found great support from the activity of Major General Grey, Brigadier-Generals Mathew, Leslie, and Sir William Erskine.

I beg leave to refer your Lordship for any other particulars, which you may wish to be informed of, to Col. Patterson, who will have the honour of delivering these dispatches, and whose services in this country entitle him to every mark of your Lordship's favour. I have the honour to be, &c.

HARLES-TOWN, Nov. 25.

[illegible] 24th of last Month a large Fleet sailed from New-York, by some said to consist of 150 sail, others 360; but, whether they carried off any particular Expedition, or were only a Convoy to Merchantmen and Transports, going home, unwith Invalids, returned Goods, and Tories with their Families and Effects, seems still to be a Matter of Doubt: However, most People in the neighbouring States to New-York, were of Opinion, that the whole British fleet and army, which have been so long and disgracefully employed in North-America, still, by this time, have burnt the city and abandoned the [illegible] of New-York and also evacuated Rhode-Island, and are making the best of their way for the West-Indies and Ireland.

Count d'Estaing, with his whole fleet, 16 ships, clean, well manned, and well provided, the sailors and soldiers all in good health and high spirits, sailed from Boston the 4th instant.

A body of armed men, supposed to be about 500, chiefly on horseback, with 4 pieces of artillery, from Pensylvania, have made a very sudden and rapid incursion overland, by way of the Alatamaha, into the neighbouring state of Georgia; burning all the houses and destroying every thing in their way. It does appear that they were discovered before last friday, yet by Sunday they had advanced to within 4 miles of Sunbury, and burnt every house on the other side of Newport ferry; but not without receiving some check, from a militia hastily collected, under Col. Screven, together with the continentals of the 3d and 4th battalions, who had retreated, in order to receive reinforcements, to Medway meeting-house, where they were intrenching, to make a stand, but having disputed every inch of ground against a superior enemy, they lost a few men and had some of their most valuable officers wounded. We since learn, that the militia have every where turned out with the greatest alacrity, and that such vigorous measures are pursuing, as with the co-operation of this state, as will, probably, not only disappoint the designs of the enemy, but also cut off their retreat. The opinion of some is, that this expedition has been contrived by Governor Tonyn, on purpose to pacify, if not, the clamorous Tories and horse-thieves, which he has, by intimidating suggestions and lavish promises, for years past, drawn from this and other states, as well to strengthen the province under his government, as to second the views of General Grant & company upon this state, which have probably been disappointed by the late sudden and successful attack of the Marquis de Bouille upon the island of Dominica.

General Heath, we hear, has been ordered to march Burgoyne's army, now commonly called the convention troops, from Rutland in New England, to Charlottesville in the state of Virginia, where they can be more conveniently accommodated.

Monday and Tuesday next, are the days on which we are to elect Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, under the new Constitution, to serve for two years — when, it is hoped, every friend to so glorious an establishment, who has a right to vote, will give that attention which is due to so important an object, and, exercise his own judgment, uninfluenced in his choice by any other consideration, than who will most ably, disinterestedly, diligently and faithfully serve his country.

On the 23d instant, Governor Henry of Virginia, issued a proclamation, continuing the embargo on all kinds of provisions to the 1st day of February next.

The same day a flag of truce arrived there from New-York with 14 passengers, only 4 of whom, viz. Dr. Mortimer, Mr. Alex. Trent, Miss Eliz. Muir, and Mr. John de Butts, were permitted to stay: the rest (James Gilchrist, Isaac Hesson, Hardin Burnley, Robt. Cowan, Wm. McWhan, Alex. Buchanan, James McDowal, Tho. Mitchel, John Patterson, and Alex. Campbell) were, in consequence of a resolution of the House of delegates of the 3d, ordered to depart the state immediately, with the same flag.

Last monday a fine brig of war, for the service of this state, built at capt. Cochran's yard, was launched, and called the Hornet: She is to be commanded by Capt. James Pine late of the Comet.

The following intelligence was received before the publication of our last; but that paper was then already full.

BRUSSELS, August 10.

THEY write from Spain, that two packet boats (which had been held in readiness some time before) upon the arrival of an extraordinary courier the night preceding, had sailed from Corunna, at day-break, on the 14th of July, for the North seas, on some secret commission. That on the 4th, at midnight, an express from court arrived at Cadiz, and by day-light next morning two merchant ships sailed for America, having first taken on board two persons of distinction, supposed to be charged with some important commission to the United States. That about the same time, the Andromache French frigate of 36 guns, with the corvette Epreuil of 14, entered the Bay, and the commander was immediately permitted to come ashore and conducted to the governor; six American vessels having been for some time blocked up by two English frigates, it was supposed he came to take them under his convoy. That the 60 French pilots brought to Cadiz, in the armed flute le Telemaque, had been immediately distributed among the Spanish fleet there; which then actually consisted of 29 ships of the line, was daily augmenting by arrivals from Ferrol and Corunna, and expected to be considerably reinforced by the arrival of the divisions of the Marquis de Casa Tilly's squadron, returning from the Brazils when it will probably be one of the most formidable naval armaments seen in our days.

PARIS, Aug. 7. The Squadron commanded by the Chevalier de Fabri, sailed from Toulon the 26th of July: It is composed of le Destin, la Victoire, of 74, le Lys, le Hardi and le Caton of 64 guns each; the Frigates de Gracieuse, la Sultane, la Flore and la Pleyade, of 26 guns each; the Xebecks le Cameleon, le Singe, le Seduisant, and le Renard of 20 guns each, and the Corvette l'Eclair of 18: Abundance of Packages of all kinds of clothing were put on board. A third squadron is fitting out at the same Port, with utmost Expedition, to consist of le Triomphant, le Heros and le Jason, Ships of the Line; and la Magicienne and la Precieuse Frigates of 30 guns each.

PARIS, Aug. 14. The Gazette of France of this day contains the following paragraph, dated Toulon, Aug. 7. "The Gracieuse Frigate, commanded by the Sieur de Vialis, has brought in two English ships, taken by the Chevalier de Fabry's squadron, one valued at 1,200,000 and the other 200,000 livres. The Corvette l'Eclair, commanded by the Sieur Destoue, has also taken and sent in, two English ships, valued at one million of livres."

CADIZ, July 30. The Marquis de Casa Tilly's Ships are successively entering the Bay from America. The St. Joseph of 70 guns, which arrived yesterday brought a Million and half of Piastres. The 4 Ships of the 1st Division, which arrived the 17th, brought the Spanish garison of St. Katharine's, restored to Portugal by the late Treaty. These ships are all to be united to our grand Fleet commanded by Admiral Cordova; which becomes every Day more formidable, and when joined by the other Division of the Marquis de Casa Tilly's, with St. Trinite of 112 guns and 4 others daily expected from Ferrol, will consist of 50 Sail of the Line, none less than 74 Guns. Don Antonio Ulloa, who lately escorted the Galleons safe home, it is said, will be 2d in command. Orders are sent to Ferrol and Corunna to hasten the finishing of all the Ships on the Stocks at those Ports, and the Towns along the Coast of Galicia are ordered to furnish the necessary Materials. The Preparations by Land are not less extraordinary. Three Regiments of Infantry are sent to Ferrol, and two to Corunna; the Fortifications at both Places are repairing and augmenting, and a Regiment of Dragoons with a Battalion of 900 Artillery are ordered thither.

PARIS, Aug. 24. The Preparations making in Britanny, leave no Room to doubt of an intended Descent on the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey. Some mention the Lieut. Gen. Marquis de Castries to command others the Count de Lusace. The Resentment which the Cruizers from those Islands have excited by their Captures, even before the Hostilities committed by Admiral Keppel, makes our Merchants desirous such a Project should be carried into execution. As large Ships cannot approach either, the 8 or 10,000 Men that are to be employed, will be carried in Frigates and Vessels of St. Malo and Coutances. In the mean Time, as these Islands are situated in the Channel, the Expedition would be subject to many Risks, unless we are assured of the Superiority of our Fleet to that of Admiral Keppel, who, according to Letters from London, will have 36 Ships: Hence, to equal it in Number, 'tis thought, that the Count d'Orvilliers may be reinforced by the squadron under the Chevalier de Fabry. And there is no Relaxation in setting up new Ships in all the Yards.

LONDON, Aug. 21. Although, without a formal declaration, open Hostilities have taken Place between this Court and France, our Ministry continue an Intercourse with that Kingdom, and frequently receive dispatches from thence. No longer ago than Yesterday Letters from Paris, and Dispatches from Lord Grantham, were brought to Lord Weymouth's Office. Since the Arrival of the Marquis d'Almodovar, the Spanish Ambassador, Rumours of Peace have increased. Our Ministry seem now almost unanimously to desire it; but none labour so indefatigably to bring about that desirable Event, as Lord Mansfield, who had the Address to bring about the Coalition of Parties in 1757, and was one of the Negociators of the Treaty of Fontainbleau. The Earl of Hertford, who was sent Ambassador to France upon the Conclusion of that Peace, it is said, is to go there again, to execute a Commission that will determine the doubtful State of neither Peace nor War; it is even pretended, that his Lordship is already gone. Whether these are Facts or not, such Reports clearly indicate, that our Court is desirous, if possible, to come to an Accommodation, after an immense and fruitless Expence of Blood and Treasure; which is the more necessary, as the true Disposition of the Court of Spain can no longer be doubted: For it is a Fact, that the Count d'Aranda, his Catholic Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, is almost always in Conference with the Count de Maurepas, the Count de Vergennes, M. de Sartine, and others of the Cabinet Council; that Doctor Franklin is frequently called to those Conferences, and that they are the subject of the Marquis d'Almodovar's Negociations; besides, the Marquis having taken lodgings in this City for only two months, it cannot be supposed, he expects his Stay here will be of any long Continuance.

While there is little room to doubt that our Ministry most heartily wish for the continuance of Peace; there are also good Grounds to believe, that Orders are already dispatched to his Majesty's Commissioners at New-York, to acknowledge the Independance of the United States, insisted upon as a Preliminary by the Congress, provided they will, on their Part, secure to the British Nation certain exclusive Privileges in Trade. It is hoped, those States (heretofore our Colonies) may still retain so much a Partiality towards their Mother Country, as to grant it some advantages, if not over their actual Ally, at least over such foreign Powers as have been backward in acknowledging them a free and independent Power.

LEYDEN, August 27. According to advices from Paris, the Brest fleet, consisting of 24 ships of the line, besides a number of frigates, &c. had again put to sea, on the 17th instant, and were to cruise off Ushant 'till joined by 6 more ships of the line, who would follow in 3 or 4 days; after which, the Count d'Orvilliers's orders are, to attack the English fleet wherever he can meet them.

LEYDEN, September 1. Private letters from Paris, agree with the accounts we have already given, of an intended descent upon the Islands of Jersey and Guernsey, on the coast of Normandy. But, according to those advices, it is the count de Vaux, known by the conquest of Corsica, who will have the command of the expedition, with a body of 12,000 men. We learn also, by letters from London of the 21st ult. (those of the 25th and 28th not being yet received) that the British fleet, augmented to 34 ships of the line, still lay at anchor the morning of the 18th; and that admiral Keppel had just been attacked with so violent a fit of the gout, that it was doubted whether he would be able to continue in the command.

COMBAHEE FERRY.

THE Subscriber takes this method of acquainting his friends and the public in general, that instead of his having no boat at his Ferry, he keeps two, one that is fixed with oars, the other with a rope, and he can prove, that no person has ever been detained half an hour since he took possession of the ferry: He returns his sincere and hearty thanks to those gentlemen who have expressed their satisfaction in regard to the entertainment they have met with; and does hereby offer a reward of One Hundred Pounds to find out the wretch, who through prejudice, has sent gentlemen at least eight miles out of their way, as I am told some scoundrel lately sent Alexander Rose, Esq; at least twenty miles round, by telling him there was no boat at the ferry.—I would not have removed to any Ferry, if I could not keep it as it ought to be, but which I shall make it my study to do, by keeping proper attendants, and furnishing good entertainment both for man and horse.—The causeway, as I said in a former advertisement, is in as good order as can be desired.

A very valuable Tract of Land of 1900 Acres,

OF which about 800 acres are swamp, well calculated for 3 or 4 settlements, with a natural drain, and proper branches for reserves; being an entire inland swamp, and not subject to freshes, having its own command of water. The uplands are high and very pleasant to settle upon, and is an excellent range for cattle. Its situation is about two miles from the great Coosahatchie swamp, and about 8 miles from a landing.
